SOUTH'S POWER WAXES

Before the South began unseating its veteran members of Congress after the 1928 Republican sweep a Democratic house in Washington sent most of the congressional honors Southward. Most of the plums fell on southern states, providing northern Republicans with a valuable vote-getting bugaboo.

The Roosevelt administration will find a different situation. No longer does the South have a monopoly of the older Democratic members of congress from point of service, and the 1932 Democratic sweep gave the non-southern states a larger numerical strength in Congress than that of the Southern States.

Should the great East, West and Middle West political divisions agree on a slate they could name the speaker of the House, fill the important offices of party whip and chairman of the committee of the whole and of chairman of the committees wielding the most power. In any event, there will be a greater division of chairmanships and other places of power among all states than ever before under a Democratic administration.

That G. O. P.-crushing landslide by the forces of Democracy last month disposed, perhaps for all time, of one of the oldest and most effective of Republican bugaboos as well as the southern stranglehold on national Democratic administrations. Politically the country isn't the same.

TECHNOLOGY AND BRIDGE

Technological unemployment is bad enough when it throws 12,000,000 people out of work but when it creates unemployment at the bridge table it is time to curb inventive genius and return to the crude devices of the stone age.

This is neither the time nor the place for the invention of labor-saving machines. There are already too many idle hands and busy tongues for the good of the land and the peace of mind.

One looks with trepidation upon any new device which supplants the human hands, but that isn't the word for the reception the electric bridge table got in serious bridge circles. That reception was an admixture of shock, surprise, anger, terror and disgust. The news was almost unbelievable.

Dealing the cards by electricity is a step in the wrong direction. What bridge needed was not less but more manual effort to keep the tongue idle. Two decks, with one person shuffling while another deals, constituted one of the blessings of the game. It left but one defect, that there were not two more decks to be shuffled or dealt.

Ad is not lost, however. No machine has yet been brought forth that will play the cards as well as shuffle and deal them. This is something for which all will give thanks except the players who talk a good game of bridge. And yet such a machine would be no more welcome to them than to their partners.

Sign of normalcy: Sophisticated New York is staging a six-day bicycle race.

Still, Solomon's harem gals probably were happy enough if he looked anything like Clark Gable.

SYNOPSIS

Dr. John Wolfe, old Dr. Montague Threadgold's assistant, is stunned at the unsanitary conditions he finds in the smug little town of Navestock. Wolfe realizes his greatest fight in ridding the town of pollution will be in overcoming the resentful attitude of the people themselves who seem perfectly satisfied with their mode of living. He encounters his first obstacle in the person of Jasper Turrell, the brewer, who objects to Wolfe taking a sample of his well water for analysis. Undaunted by opposition, Wolfe continues his researches and prepares a map of the town's unsanitary areas. The one bright spot in Navestock is the home of Mrs. Mary Mascall where Wolfe is always sure of a welcome. When Mrs. Mascall is too ill to go to Flemington Court to pay her dues of three dozen eggs to the Lord of the Manor, Wolfe offers to accompany her young daughter, Jess.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Wolfe had been writing a prescription.

"And Bob had better take this. I see no reason why I couldn't go egg hunting."

"You! Oh, come along; what fun! I bet I'll find more eggs than you will. And Sally can get tea."

They left Mary Mascall smiling in her chair. She was one of those women who could enjoy the playfulness of life, even in the midst of an attack of asthma. Jess might rush out on one of her escapades, and her mother would laugh over it and share in the girl's spirit. Mrs. Mascall had no particular liking for your Goody Two-Shoes child, who darned stockings, was fussily and piously sentimental, and played the sweet angel with bleatings of "dearest mamma."

In the porch Wolfe picked up the egg basket.

"Yes, you can carry it," said Jess.

He made her a grave bow.

"Madam, your very humble servant."

Bob was sent to the stable with Wolfe's horse, and told to saddle the fat pony and take the prescription and the note that Wolfe had written to Dr. Threadgold at Navestock. The serious man of eight-and-twenty and the tall girl of sixteen plunged in among the out-buildings and stacks of Moor Farm that were jumbled together with the picturesque complexity that belongs to old towns. Great black doors let one into huge, cool interiors where sunlight crept in through chinks in the walls, and sparrows fluttered about the beams. There was the red-brick granary, where you might wade knee-deep in golden grain or be weighed on the sack-weighing machine in the corner. There was the wagon shed, where the swallows built; the cake-house, a queer, dark, fragrant place with its cake breaker ready to reduce the brown slabs to fragments. Cattle sheds abounded, clean, white-washed loggias with sunlit yards yellow with straw.

Jess made for the largest of the cattle sheds.

"Come along."

She did not unlatch the byre gate, but was over it with the flick of the skirt. Mrs. Mascall had abetted Jess in a wild revolt against crinolines. No girl walking in a species of tent could have trampled like Jess Mascall over the yellow straw. As for climbing gates! Wolfe blessed mere Nature, and vaulted after her.

"You ought to be handicapped."

"And you call yourself a man!"

She made for the long manger,

Jess was over the gate with a flick of the skirt and Dr. Wolfe soon vaulted after her.

the recess below it being a favourite haunt of matronly-minded hens. Wolfe made a rush. A brown bird fled in absurd terror, flustered round Wolfe's legs, and flew cackling over the gate.

"Here—one, two, three—"

"I say, wait a moment, let me have a chance!"

"Well, look then, don't stand and—"

"I was feeling sorry for that hen."

"Four, five—"

Wolfe made a dash for the far corner, and pounced on an egg lying amid the straw.

"I've got one, anyhow."

She came up, laughing in his face.

"It's a chalk one!"

"Oh, confound it!"

"And I've got six in my skirt. Where's the basket? You'll have to be very careful."

"I'll walk like an old maid. Just like this—see!"

"Oh, you great silly! We mustn't waste time."

They ventured into all manner of dim interiors, dark and musty corners, and narrow ways between the stacks. Jess knew the idiosyncrasies of all the Manor Farm hens. There was one that persisted in laying her eggs on an old sheepskin that had been thrown into the loft left in the wagon shed. Wolfe was made to scramble, using a cart wheel as a ladder.

"Done, by George! Dusty knees—and no egg!"

"Poor Doctor Wolfe!"

He looked down at her from above.

"Why poor?"

"I didn't mean you were poor. Only—"

"Just a touch of sympathy, eh? You are a sweet young woman, Miss Jess."

She laughed, and flushed momentarily with a touch of sudden self-consciousness.

"Am I? It's nice of you to say that. We've got three dozen and a half. And there's the tea bell."

They walked back to the farmhouse very sedately.

The Whispering Court at Flemington's Cross was held at nine o'clock, and at eight Joe Munday, the carrier, dressed in a black coat for the occasion, came round from the stable with the red-wheeled gig. The farm labourers had gathered under the great cypresses in front of the house, each man carrying a lighted lantern, and a pitchfork, crook, or pole. Jess had gone to her mother's room to dress, and Wolfe went out into the garden and joined the white-smoked group under the cypresses.

"A fine night."

"It be."

There was a sort of grumbling acquiescence, but the men did not appear interested in Wolfe or his opinions. As a body they stood and stared at the house, like bores in a strolling theatre, waiting for the curtain to go up. Wolfe had a feeling that he made these men uncomfortable. He could see a light in Mrs. Mascall's room. Presently a shadow came across the blind, and there was a tapping at the window.

"Listen to't."

"She be comin'."

The labourers ranged themselves on either side of the stone-paved path. Wolfe stood back from them a little, and nearer the gate. He saw the porch door open, and Sally, the maid, standing there, holding her skirts back proudly to let her lady pass. Jess came out, wearing a red cloak with the hood turned up, a green skirt, and green stockings. Resting against her bosom she carried the basket of eggs, decorated with red and green ribbons and with flowers.

The men held up their lanterns, and looked to her with quaint gravity.

"God keep thee, good Mistress."

"May the beasts be fat in your fields, and the bins packed full o' corn."

"God's blessing on thee—and the merry month o' May."

Ask your dealer to show you our special Gift Box containing 100 "BLUE BLADES." You pay for the blades alone. The handsome cigarette or jewel case—rich mahogany color—is free.

KINDERGARTEN TOT IS SURPRISED ON HIS NATAL ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. Joseph Beck, Croydon, was hostess to scholars of Miss Adelia Wright's kindergarten yesterday in honor of the birthday anniversary of her son, Joseph. The party was a complete surprise to Joseph.

Prizes were awarded to Mary Elizabeth Finnegan, Robert Burton, Myron O'Reilly, Clarence Stables, and Joseph Beck, for games. Each girl received a ball, and the boys were given horns.

The traditional birthday cake, this one holding five candles, graced the table where refreshments were served. Decorations were pink and green. Favors were noisemakers dressed as clowns and baskets filled with candy.

PUTTING THE "MAD" IN MADIGAN IS RISKY

By Ralph B. Jordan
(I. N. S. Sports Writer)

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 8.—(INS)—Discipline is just as important to a football team as to an army.

That's the theory of Edward P. (Slip) Madigan, coach of the Galloping Gaels of St. Mary's, and he had his discipline, even if it meant losing his four best players, two of them All-American selections.

Madigan proved his seriousness seven years ago by "firing" half of his line the night before the important— to him—Santa Clara game and put on an even more convincing demonstration recently in dealing with a quartette of stars who "missed" the St. Mary's special out of Los Angeles after the University of California, at Los Angeles, battle.

The erring gridders at Los Angeles were Angel Brovelli, fullback, and Mike Steponovich, guard, both selected as All-American timber, and Charlie Baird, the Gaels' best half-back, and Garry Vivaldi, their star end.

"What are you fellows doing here?" Madigan coldly inquired of them when they showed up on the Gael practice field the Monday after the Saturday train-missing.

The athletes stammered that they didn't understand.

"Well," Mr. Madigan made himself clear, "you're no longer on this squad," and turned to his business as the amazed heroes went their way.

And Steponovich stayed "fired," although the others, after a week out in the cold, managed to win pardons, returning to the squad just in time to play the game of their lives in administering a trimming to Oregon, Brovelli especially shining at his best.

"Discipline is an essential in football and in life," spoke Madigan, "and these young athletes must learn that."

The late Percy Haughton at Harvard was very much like that; in fact, so much so that there never was any record of Harvard men missing trains. Haughton's word was law and he only said a thing once.

There was a time, for instance, when he sent a man in to tell Sam Felton, Harvard's great punter of that generation, to kick 35 yards, no more and, if possible, no less. But Mr. Felton's foot slipped or he had his mind on the Junior Prom or something, because he hauled off and let one go, 65 yards down the field. It was a beautiful effort and Mr. Felton was just beginning to assume a self congratulatory glow, when another player ran out from the sidelines. He tapped Mr. Felton on the shoulder and said that, believe it or not, he was substituting for Mr. Felton.

So the latter went to the sidelines and silently took a seat on the bench. He was still sitting there three weeks later. He sat alone and ignored. Nobody paid the slightest attention, least of all Haughton. For another week, Mr. Felton donned his uniform every day, stood around for two hours, and silently disrobed. Then suddenly—

"You can kick 35 yards, if I tell you to, Felton, can't you?"

It seemed that Felton not only could but would—and the incident was closed.

DAVE'S DELICATESSEN

Officers Are Chosen For Bristol Fathers' Ass'n.

Officers of the Bristol Fathers' Association were unanimously elected last night when the association met in the high school auditorium.

Those chosen were:

President, Richard French; vice-president, Roy F. Fry; recording secretary, Horace Schmidt; financial secretary, Harold F. Hunter; treasurer, George King.

Executive committee: Harry Pope, James F. Blanche, Jessie Betz and Walter Fagan.

Following committee was named to draft resolutions upon the death of Morris D. Harrison, long an active worker in the organization:

Rev. George Boswell, Doron Green and Dr. Frank Lehman.

Following the election the retiring president, Stanford K. Runyan welcomed the newly-elected president, Mr. Runyan retires after three years of service as president of the organization. The organization has made wonderful progress under his direction and the meeting last night marked the climax of a series of meetings which have been most interesting.

Champion tumbler from Herman's Physical Training Institute, Philadelphia, were present in large numbers and gave an exceptional program, as were also William J. Hermann, Jr., Olympic tumbling champion, seven times national tumbling champion, national club swinging star and national three weapon swordsman.

William Ferry, the frog man, made a great hit.

The Legion Cadets and the high school orchestra furnished the music for the occasion.

The large audience which taxed the capacity of the auditorium applauded time after time and was well pleased with the performance.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL.

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sick and the food d. looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salt, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, genuine, gentle vegetable extracts, are gentle when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name C. Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. It's a substitute. 25c at all stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

One ton will convince you!

IF YOU burn one ton of Koppers Rainey-Wood Coke, that makes you a regular user of this superior fuel. It doesn't take long to realize that one good ton of Koppers Rainey-Wood Coke deserves another!

And why not?

Koppers costs less in the first place. And it costs less afterward because it burns longer—gives heat instead of ashes! Easy to start, it is even easier to bank. It's uniform in size—clean—sootless—light. Koppers Rainey-Wood Coke has everything in its favor as a fuel for use in your furnace this winter. One trial will convince you of its many advantages—from every standpoint. Rainey-Wood Coke Company, Conshohocken, Pa.
